

Marinos Chourdakis is PhD Candidate in the Department of Political Science at University of Crete. His doctoral thesis is “Educational Policy, Lifelong Learning and Employability: European Framework and the case of Greece”. He studied Political Science at University of Crete (2002-2006) and he is holder of MA in Political Analysis and Political Theory (2007-2009). His main research interests focus on European and Public Policies in Higher Education Policy, Lifelong Learning, Employment and Training. He has also participated in summer schools and international conferences and has publications in Educational Policy and Political Parties. He is member of CHR (Centre for Human Rights) and CPRD (Centre for Policy Research and Documentation). He has also cooperated as researcher with NCPAL (National Centre for Public Administration and Local Government) for study of “Educational Needs of Public Officials” (2009) and SSF (State Scholarships Foundation) in research project of “Impact Assessment of Lifelong Learning Programs” (2009). He is also member of research team for the study about “Needs (People who are - Not in Education, Employment or Training) in Greece” (2011).